Appomattox County . . . Yesterday And Today

by Paul Ghioto

Visitors to Appomattox Court House National Historical Park often comment on how clean and orderly the grounds and buildings always are. Despite the efforts of a few inconsiderate visitors to this historic shrine, the park remains in its well kept state by the concerted efforts of all its staff members.

The amount and type of work to be done, and even the size of the staff, is dictated by the different seasons of the year. However, the following observations made in two letters written by former Commonwealth Secretary George Wythe Munford, in April 1865, illustrate an entirely different problem with which this work force would have been confronted had the park existed back then.

". . . Dick has not been injured by the Yankees at all, indeed he has rather been benefitted, for when they broke up their camp at Appomattox Courthouse, they left great numbers of wagons and gear, spades, picks, shovels, iron of every description suitable for farm purposes, trace chains and a great many useful things, besides many broken down horses & mules. His negroes went up, as did almost all from the neighboring farms and brought back two fine wagons and four or five horses & mules & much other plunder. Several of the horses & mules after resting will be very serviceable . . .

". . . I passed yesterday through the battle field at Appomattox Courthouse. For thirteen miles both sides of the road as far as the eye could reach - one eternal scene of desolation & destruction. The debris of the battle field are scattered in every direction - Broken wagons, cannon carriages caisons all cut down or burnt & cannon balls, grape-shot & shell enough for an army's supply for two great battles. No effort has been made to collect these things. The people of the country have gathered up every other valuable. What they will do for living is past my comprehension. Not a sprig of grass & not a rail left. I saw at least five hundred dead horses still remaining on the ground in a horrible state of decay, rendering it odious to pass along the road. Strange the buzzards & other animals that prey on carrion do not touch them. This has been the case all through the War. . ."

(April 30, 1865)

Bicentennial Event

By D. W. Mac Pherson
Virginia Tech Extension

The last history of Appomattox County was written in 1965 by Vera Smith Stanley. Prior to that, Nathaniel R. Featherston wrote a hardbound edition in 1948. Material for the book was gathered mostly from "shirt cuff notes" collected from Mr. Featherston's personal visits with many county residents. Our county has changed a great deal since 1948 and 1965, and the nation's Bicentennial era offers an unprecedented opportunity to examine our past and present, while looking toward the future.

The Appomattox County Bicentennial Commission is pursuing the idea of publishing, with photos, the family history of all families residing in Appomattox County as of July 4, 1976. This will be written by individual families, and photographs, old and new, can be included. Final editing and typing will be handled by Bicentennial volunteers. The hardbound book will sell for about $15 per copy, with advance ordering available.

Who can be included in the county history? Any family, from the "native resident" to the most recent "come lately" can be included so long as the history is submitted by the deadline to be selected. All members of the family can participate in the research and writing of their family history. old photographs of family members in front of vintage cars, old public buildings and businesses will take readers back in time for a total heritage search of their county. The Bicentennial Commission will soon make available a recommended list of items to include in your family history. For example: What is your birthplace and date? When and where did you settle in Appomattox County? What brought you to Appomattox? Who were some of your ancestors? What are the names and ages of your children? What are some of your activities, past and present? Do you have any interesting true stores about your family in Appomattox? (The older the yarn, the better). Can you provide any old photographs?

At the request of civic organizations, churches, and other groups, a Bicentennial Commission member will speak at meetings to further explain the publication of Appomattox County history. Virginia Tech Extension is presently preparing a slide/tape show for use at these meetings. The show will explain the American Revolution Bicentennial era and the activities planned for Appomattox County.

Everyone is encouraged to contact any member of the Bicentennial Commission and give their reaction to the county history publication. Commission members are: W. C. Dudley, Paul Ghioto, Bob Jamerson, Rachel Lawson, Barbara Mac Pherson, Mac Mac Pherson, Hazel Lee Martin, Sammy Mathews, Franklin Vaughn, Shirley Walton, and Christine Ranson. Inquiries and comments concerning the county history plus any other county Bicentennial activities are always invited by the B. C. Chairman, Paul Ghioto, Route 3, Box 91 A, Appomattox, 24522, Phone 352-8867.
